These authors could refer to both Magnusson's group just one or the other. If there is a possibility of ambiguity, specify the author again. In any case, S1 is very long (42 words).

62. Our results agree with those obtained on bilingual children (Magnusson et al. (2001)). They also agree with studies in (2000), who used middle school and high school pupils. (42 words)

7.9 Use short paragraphs

Throughout the Discussion, and sometimes during your text, to switch from your work to other authors' work. Each of comparison, begin a new paragraph. This makes it follow.

Also consider using one paragraph to describe other graphs to describe your own. Continuously switching your work to other authors' can be quite hard for readers.

For more on the advantages of short paragraphs see...

7.10 Make logical connections between findings and yours

When you write the various sections of your paper to other authors, but the reader doesn't. You need...

In order to assess the possibility of the bilingual children in the survey, a series of tests were carried out which involved simultaneous translations between the two languages in front of an audience of 20 people. None of language skills are then carried out under conditions of stress (Berg 1992). The outcomes from these simultaneous translations indicated that ...

Sections 9.3-9.6 focus on how to tone down (i.e. reduce the strength of) various grammatical parts of a sentence to a degree that most references would consider to be a more appropriate level of assertiveness, confidence and certainty.

9.3 Toning down verbs

There are some verbs that leave no room for doubt, for example: is / are, means, equals, demonstrates, proves, manifests.

61. This factor is responsible for the increase in ...
62. These results demonstrate the importance of ...
63. These findings are conclusive proof that x = y.
64. This problem manifests itself in ...
65. This means that x = y.

S1-S5 give the reader no space to choose another possible interpretation. Such claims are very strong when used in reference to your own findings, but may be fine when talking about the literature.

Softer versions of S1-S5 are in S6-S10, respectively.

66. This factor may be / is probably responsible for the increase in ...
67. These results would seem to show / indicate / suggest the importance of ...
68. These findings provide some evidence / appear to prove that x = y.
69. This problem may / seems / appears to manifest itself in ...
70. This seems likely / probable / possible that x = y.

S7-S9 make use of two verbs, the first form appears much weaker the power of the second (shows, proves, manifests). Other useful verbs with a similar function are: help, contribute, have a tendency, and be inclined.

9.4 Toning down adjectives and adverbs

Some adjectives and adverbs have a very strong tone. Examples: important, essential, crucial, unique, vital, essential, significant, important, extremely important, very significant, of some importance, extremely important, evidence, conclusively, definitely, undoubtedly.

When you are referring to your own work, you need to be softer adjectives and adverbs. You might risk being over-assertive. For example:

61. "The proved approach is particularly interesting for physics ..."
