

Chapter 15

“How Well Am I Doing?”

Statement of Cash Flows

Solutions to Questions

15-1 The statement of cash flows highlights the major activities that have provided and used cash during a period and shows their effects on the overall cash balance.

15-2 Cash equivalents are short-term, highly liquid investments such as Treasury bills, commercial paper, and money market funds. They are included with cash because investments of this type are made solely for the purpose of generating a return on temporarily idle funds and they can be easily converted to cash.

15-3 (1) Operating activities: Transactions that affect current assets, current liabilities, or net income.

(2) Investing activities: Transactions that involve the acquisition or disposition of noncurrent assets.

(3) Financing activities: Transactions (other than the payment of interest) involving borrowing from creditors, and any transactions involving the owners of a company.

15-4 Interest is included as an operating activity since it is part of net income. Financing activities are narrowly defined to include only the principal amount borrowed or repaid.

15-5 Since the entire proceeds from a sale of an asset (including any gain) appear as a cash inflow from investing activities, the gain must be deducted from net income to avoid double counting.

15-6 Transactions involving accounts payable are not considered to be financing activities because such transactions relate to a company's day-to-day operating activities rather than to its financing activities.

15-7 The repayment of $300,000 and the borrowing of $500,000 must both be shown “gross” on the statement of cash flows. That is, the company would show $500,000 of cash provided by financing activities and then show $300,000 of cash used by financing activities.

15-8 The direct method reconstructs the income statement on a cash basis by restating revenues and expenses in terms of cash inflows and outflows. The indirect method starts with net income and adjusts it to a cash basis to determine the cash provided by operating activities.

15-9 Depreciation is not really a source of cash, even though it is listed as a “source” on the statement of cash flows. Adding back depreciation changes to net income to compute the amount of cash provided by operating activities creates the illusion that depreciation is a source of cash. It isn't. Changes to the accumulated depreciation account are added back to net income because they are equivalent to a decrease in an asset account. [See Exhibit 15-2.]

15-10 An increase in the Accounts Receivable account must be deducted from net income under the indirect method because this is an increase in a noncash asset.

15-11 A sale of equipment for cash would be classified as an investing activity. Any transaction involving the acquisition or disposition of noncurrent assets is classified as an investing activity.

15-12 Free cash flow is net cash provided by operating activities minus capital expenditures and dividends.
