Collaborate with others to support and enhance client services.

W-8

We often work with others to ensure the best outcomes for our clients. Collaboration is necessary for creating effective interventions. When we think of collaboration, we often think of interdisciplinary collaboration (e.g. with Speech-Language Pathologists and Occupational Therapists) but we also collaborate with clients, stakeholders, and family members as well as with other professionals like doctors, psychologists, teachers, and anyone else on our clients' support team. Remember that we are all on the same side - the clients!

Barriers to Effective Collaboration - Henderson et al (2020) identified the following barriers to effective interdisciplinary collaboration:

1. Structural barriers include time constraints due to busy schedules, organizational constraints (due to organizations not prioritizing or supporting collaboration), geographic distance (working in different locations, making regular communication and collaboration challenging).
2. Terminology - Professionals may not fully understand each other's roles, terms, or methods, making it hard for others to understand.
3. Interdisciplinary differences - Professionals may also use jargon or acronyms common to their discipline, and generally lack trust and respect for other disciplines. For example, a doctor might not value the input of a behavioral therapist.
4. Ethical differences - Different professions have different ethical standards and disagreements about what is appropriate. We may reject interventions that are too complicated or time-consuming for our clients or other professionals.
5. Training in interdisciplinary collaboration - Many professionals do not receive training in interdisciplinary collaboration. For example, a teacher may not be trained in behavior analysis.
6. Measurement - Different professions use different methods to measure effectiveness. For example, a teacher may use standardized tests while a behavior analyst uses direct observation.

Strategies to include client preferences - Conducting preference assessments for interventions, using interviews and questionnaires, ensuring assent, using choices within sessions.

Social Validity

Consider these variables - Cultural variables, language, treatment setting, age of the client, access to resources
