

IN carrying out its mission of fire protection and response to countless types of emergencies, the FDNY utilizes several types of apparatus. Since circumstances can develop at an operation which requires quick and decisive action, it's necessary for FDNY members to have an understanding of the apparatus in service. The two basic units of the FDNY are the Engine Company and the Ladder Company. The following chapter will introduce the primary apparatus of these units. The first section will focus on Engine company apparatus.

PART 1: ENGINE COMPANY APPARATUS

1. INTRODUCTION:

- 1.1 The function of engine apparatus (operated by the Engine Company Chauffer) is to deliver engine company personnel, hose, appliances, and an assortment of tools to the scene of an operation. Additionally, this rig is to be positioned to utilize the various available sources of water and pump the water needed in operations. FDNY engines carry an onboard supply of water- but this supply is only enough to start operations at an involved incident.

- 1.2 Since utilizing properly positioned hoselines (which are supplied adequately and operated efficiently) is one of the major factors to a successful operation, it is essential that all members have an understanding of pumping operations and how to use the pump of an FDNY engine.
- 1.3 Although the FDNY employs several manufacturers and models of pumpers the same general procedures apply in pumping operations regardless of make or model of apparatus.
