Collective Creativity

A few years ago, I had lunch with the head of a major motion picture studio, who declared that his central problem was not finding good people – it was finding good ideas. Since then, when giving talks, I've asked audiences whether they agree with him. Almost always there's a 50/50 split, which has astounded me because I couldn't disagree more with the studio executive. His belief is rooted in a misguided view of creativity that exaggerates the importance of the initial idea in creating an original product. And it reflects a profound misunderstanding of how to manage the large risks inherent in producing breakthroughs.

When it comes to producing breakthroughs, both technological and artistic, Pixar's track record is unique. In the early 1990s, we were known as the leading technological pioneer in the field of computer animation. Our years of R&D culminated in the release of Toy Story in 1995, the world's first computer-animated feature film. In the following 13 years, we have released eight other films (A Bug's Life; Toy Story 2; Monsters, Inc.; Finding Nemo; The Incredibles; Cars; Robotville;

Post-Fordist Cinema Jeff Menne, 2019-02-26 The New Hollywood boom of the late 1960s and 1970s is celebrated as a time when maverick directors bucked the system Against the backdrop of counterculture sensibilities and the prominence of auteur theory New Hollywood directors such as Robert Altman and Francis Ford Coppola seemed to embody creative individualism In Post Fordist Cinema Jeff Menne rewrites the history of this period arguing that auteur theory served to reconcile directors to Hollywood's corporate project Menne traces the surprising affinities between auteur theory and management gurus such as Peter Drucker who envisioned a more open and flexible corporate style In founding production companies New Hollywood filmmakers took part in the creation of new corporate models that emphasized entrepreneurial creativity For firms such as Kirk Douglas's Bryna Productions Altman's Lion's Gate Films the Zanuck Brown Company and BBS Productions the counterculture ethos limbered up the studio system's sclerotic production process with striking parallels to how management theory conceived of the role of the individual within the firm Menne offers insightful readings of how films such as Lonely Are the Brave, Brewster McCloud, Jaws and The King of Marvin Gardens narrate the conditions in which they were created depicting shifting notions of work and corporate structure While auteur theory allowed directors to cast themselves as independent creators Menne argues that its most consequential impact came as a management doctrine An ambitious rethinking of New Hollywood Post Fordist Cinema sheds new light on the cultural myth of the great director and the birth of the creative economy
