

Chapter 4

Accumulating and Assigning Costs to Products

QUESTIONS

4-1 The cost of the raw materials entered into production is traced from the raw materials account to the work-in-process inventory account. The cost of manufacturing labor and overhead costs are assigned to production by adding them to the work-in-process inventory account. Overhead costs are assigned (or allocated or apportioned) as determined by the cost system. When manufacturing is completed, work is transferred to finished goods inventory, and costs are moved from the work-in-process inventory account to the finished goods inventory account. Finally, when goods are sold, their costs are moved from the finished goods inventory account to cost of goods sold.

4-2 Manufacturing organizations face greater challenges in product costing, especially the assignment of overhead costs, than would an service organization do. The issue also extends all manufacturing costing systems. In an attempt to trace the costs that produce accumulation in any process organization involves having manufacturing, as described above in 4-1, to each organization, goods are purchased and then manufactured. The cost of the goods purchased is traced over an account that accumulates the cost of manufacturing necessary to the costs. These costs various overhead costs such as labor, depreciation on the costs, lighting, and heating. The primary focus is cost assignment to the production of particular lines or departments. Therefore, each organization like manufacturing organization, face the issue of how to allocate various overhead costs to themselves, for example, the cost of purchasing and selling products, or department costs.

Service organizations that undertake large projects, such as in a construction, focus on determining the cost of a project. In such situation, the major direct cost, requires job, is often a large proportion of the project's cost. The organization will often assign various overhead costs to determine project profitability.
