Monarch Butterflies: Incredible Migration

Monarch butterflies are famous for their long-distance migration. They travel thousands of miles from their birthplace in North America to Central America and the Caribbean. This incredible journey is made possible by their unique ability to store energy and navigate using the Earth's magnetic field.

Monarch butterflies are also known for their bright orange and black wings. These colors serve as a warning to predators that they are toxic. This toxicity is passed on to their eggs and larvae, which feed on milkweed plants. The larvae then pupate and emerge as adult butterflies.

Monarch butterflies are a symbol of hope and resilience. Their migration is a testament to the power of nature and the ability of these small creatures to overcome great challenges.
