With only months left to live Daisy is forced to confront her mortality but her greatest fear isn't dying. It's leaving behind the man she loves a brilliant but endearingly helpless husband who has always relied on her. Unable to rest until she knows Jack will be okay Daisy decides she must do the unthinkable find him another wife. With determination humor and aching vulnerability she searches coffee shops parks and online dating sites for the woman who might one day take her place. But as Daisy's plan grows more real so does the emotional cost forcing her to question whether ensuring her husband's happiness means sacrificing her own. Tender funny and profoundly heartfelt this novel explores love marriage mortality and the impossible choices we make when time runs out. It's a powerful meditation on what it means to love selflessly and when to finally choose yourself. Children of
