The allusions will be presented as they are listed on the worksheet, which is similar to the order in which the allusions appear in the story. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> There are one hundred fill-in-the-blank questions on the worksheet, but there are only twenty-two allusions total. Students will be placed into eleven groups, which will be pre-determined by mixed ability. I will attempt to mix high and low performing students as well as gender and race groups for a wide variety of partnerships. I am doing this not only for the academic performance of the students, but also to help aid the behavioral aspects of the classroom. I would students to be able to perform well together moreover their ability to socialize. Students will be given their specific two allusions, one poster, and the worksheet to complete. On day one, students will turn in the worksheet with their selected allusions answered, their poster, and an analysis of what the purpose of the allusion is in Antigone. They are to complete their given allusions (predetermined by group and indicated on the worksheet), create an illustration that best encapsulates the meaning or person in the allusion, and show how it is used and found in the text. On this day, students will be presenting for the first time, I expect the presentations to be between three and five minutes each. Their rubrics are attached to their worksheets. During each pair/trio's presentation, the other students will fill in the blanks of the words on the presenting groups' section of the worksheet. By the end of the four days, the twenty-two allusions will be complete. Below is the worksheet given to each student on the previous day, the first page contains the rubric for the assessment: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> The first page is the key, the second page has the rubric. This version has the groups mapped out, the version for the students only vary by having the number 1-100 instead of the ones for the blanks.
