Government Accountability Office,2017-08-04 In 2012 the FECA program provided more than 2.1 billion in wage loss compensation to federal workers who sustained injuries or illnesses while performing federal duties Total disability beneficiaries with an eligible dependent are compensated at 75 percent of gross wages at the time of injury and those without are compensated at 66.23 percent Benefits are adjusted for inflation and are not taxed nor subject to age restrictions Some policymakers have raised questions about the level of FECA benefits especially compared to federal retirement benefits Proposals to revise FECA for future total and partial disability beneficiaries include setting initial FECA benefits at a single rate 66.23 or 70 percent of applicable wages at time of injury regardless of whether the beneficiary has eligible dependents and converting FECA benefits to 50 percent of applicable wages at time of injury adjusted for inflation once beneficiaries reach full Social Security retirement age This testimony presents results of GAO s four recent reports on FECA issues It summarizes 1 potential effects of the proposals to compensate total disability FECA beneficiaries at a single rate 2 potential effects of the proposal to reduce FECA benefits to 50 percent of applicable wages at full Social Security retirement age for total disability beneficiaries and 3 how partial disability beneficiaries might fare under the proposed changes To do this work GAO conducted simulations comparing FECA benefits Federal Employees' Compensation Act Andrew Sherrill,2013 Federal Employees' Compensation Act U S Government Accountability Office Gao,2019-06-10 Federal Employees Compensation Act Analysis of Benefits Associated with Proposed Program Changes
