Circuit Description

The Transmission Range Switch is part of the Transmission Park/Neutral Position (PNP) switch mounted on the transmission output shaft. The four inputs from the transmission range switch interface to the PCM when position is selected by the Transmission output shaft. This information is used for gear locking, shift control logic, shift and oil valve operation. The combination of the four transmission range input signals determines the PCM commanded gear output. The input voltage level at the PCM is high (5V) when the transmission range switch is open and low (0V) when the switch is closed to ground. The state of each input is represented on the scan tool as high-high voltage level, Low-voltage voltage level. The four parameters represent transmission range output. Party, A, B, and C inputs respectively.

signals determine the PCM to command an output voltage level and combination, all the DTCs stored. The transmission range switch combination for each of the Transmission Range Switch input type.
