How Management Accounting Information Supports Decision Making

QUESTIONS

- 1-1 Management accounting is a discipline that designs planning and performance measurement systems, using financial and nonfinancial information, to help an organization develop and implement its strategy. The information must be relevant and helpful, and customized to serve multiple purposes, such as making decisions, allocating resources, and monitoring, evaluating, and rewarding performance. Information for the “plan” and “do” steps of the PDCA cycle includes prospective data on costs, profits, efficiency, and quality associated with alternative ways to produce or provide goods or services. Information for the “check” and “act” steps includes assessments of how well the organization is achieving its objectives. Common information requirements include measures of cost, quality, profitability, and timeliness.
- 1-2 Two examples of financial management accounting information are the cost of producing a product and the cost of delivering a service. Measures related to customer satisfaction and loyalty and innovation are two examples of non-financial management accounting information.
- 1-3 Both the disciplines of financial accounting and management accounting are based on quantitative information about an entity’s operations. However, these two disciplines can be differentiated as follows:
- Financial accounting is retrospective in nature while management accounting is both retrospective and prospective in nature.
 - Financial accounting is primarily oriented towards external stakeholders such as investors, creditors, and regulators. On the other hand, the discipline of management accounting is oriented towards meeting the decision making needs of the parties who are internal to the organization, namely managers and employees.
 - Financial accounting has to be consistent with the rules framed by the standard setters and the regulatory authorities. Management accounting is
