CHEM 201-06

SYLLABUS

Senior Instructor: Dr. Franco

Email: dbfran01@louisville.edu

Office Hours: Help Center Room, Chemistry Building, time TBD.

About this course: Chem 201 is the first semester of the mainstream, General Chemistry course for many students interested in science, engineering, preprofessional and other majors. This course also fulfills a General Education credit (3 cr hrs) in Natural Sciences (S). The course objectives for Chem 201 are to educate the student in a number of areas including atoms, elements, compounds, reactions, stoichiometry, aqueous chemistry, gases, thermodynamics, atomic structure, periodicity, molecular structure, and bonding principles. In addition to its academic purposes, the course covers material relevant to everyday living. This relevance will be emphasized throughout the semester. This course does not include laboratory; the laboratory courses are totally separate: they have separate course numbers, separate Senior Instructors, separate TAs and separate requirements.

Cardinal Core Learning Outcomes

Natural Sciences are concerned with understanding the laws of nature and the physical world. Students who satisfy this requirement will be able to do all of the following:

Learning outcomes	Assessment strategy
1. Demonstrate an understanding of the nature and methods of science inquiry.	This outcome will be met in the associated laboratory courses, Chem 207 and 208.
2. Apply scientific principles: to interpret evidence, to make predictions, and/or to explain cross-cutting concepts in one or more of the sciences.	Test questions will probe students' understanding of principles and their applications to various qualitative and quantitative aspects.
3. Explain how scientific principles relate to issues of personal and/or societal importance.	Test questions will probe students' understanding of the relevance of the various chemical principles to experiences relevant in the modern world (e.g., the toxicity of the oxygen we breathe).
4. Communicate effectively an understanding of scientific concepts and experimental outcomes in speech or writing, using sound scientific terminology and citation appropriate to the discipline.	Test questions will probe students' understanding of scientific concepts in written response. Experimental outcomes will be met in the associated laboratory courses, Chem 207 and 208.
