URBAN REGENERATION ENQUIRY (HUMAN)

ENQUIRY QUESTION

Has regeneration of the London Docklands had a positive impact?

STRAND 1 - SELECTING A SUITABLE QUESTION FOR GEOGRAPHICAL ENQUIRY

Explain how the location of your fieldwork was relevant to your question being investigated. [3]

The London Docklands area is a good location to answer my question as it was near and offered a range of suitable sites which had been completely redeveloped and regenerated, sites that were in progress of being regenerated and a site which had not experienced redevelopment directly. These were in close enough proximity for me to visit all the sites in one visit and enabled a clear comparison of the sites to establish whether the redevelopment had brought about positive changes to the environment and benefits to the area.

Explain how geographical theory or concepts supported your human geography fieldwork enquiry. [3]

My enquiry was supported by an understanding of the geographical processes of de-industrialisation and inner-city decline, followed by redevelopment and regeneration. Knowing the historical context of the London Docklands area and the problems it had faced, including dereliction and deprivation, meant that I was able to consider how regeneration could alter and improve that environment to bringing more benefits. Understanding the geographical processes of inner-city decline, I was able to understand what to look for in terms of the characteristics of and judge whether the regeneration had impacted this positively.

Explain how you responded to the risks associated with your chosen site for fieldwork. [4]

There were a number of risks associated with our chosen fieldwork site as we were working in an urban area with traffic, so we only crossed roads with pedestrian crossings or used the pedestrian walkways across the site. Some areas had very little traffic, but we still needed to remain on the pavements and walk in pairs rather than a group. Additionally, there was stranger danger, and we ensured that we moved out of people's way and stood to the side when they passed. We stayed in groups of 4 at all times to stay safe. Finally, there was a risk of tripping on uneven surfaces, so we wore trainers and were focused when walking in a group, to keep an eye on pavements and road kerbs to reduce the risk.
