Frontiers in the Acquisition of Literacy Claire M. Fletcher-Flinn, 2015-09-28 Learning to read and to spell are two of the most important cultural skills that must be acquired by children and for that matter anyone learning a second language We are not born with an innate ability to read A reading system of mental representations that enables us to read must be formed in the brain Learning to read in alphabetic orthographies is the acquisition of such a system which links mental representations of visual symbols letters in print words with pre existing phonological sound and semantic comprehension cognitive systems for language Although spelling draws on the same representational knowledge base and is usually correlated with reading the acquisition processes involved are not quite the same Spelling requires the sequential production of letters in words and at beginning levels there may not be a full degree of integration of phonology with its representation by the orthography Reading on the other hand requires only the recognition of a word for pronunciation Hence spelling is more difficult than reading and learning to spell may necessitate more complete representations or more conscious access to them The learning processes that children use to acquire such cognitive systems in the brain and whether these same processes are universal across different languages and orthographies are central theoretical questions Most children learn to read and spell their language at the same time thus the co ordination of these two facets of literacy acquisition needs explication as well as the effect of different teaching approaches on acquisition Lack of progress in either reading and or spelling is also a major issue of concern for parents and teachers necessitating a cross disciplinary approach to the problem encompassing major efforts from researchers in neuroscience cognitive science experimental psychology and education The purpose of this Research Topic is to summarize and review what has been accomplished so far and to further explore these general issues Contributions from different perspectives are welcomed and could include theoretical computational and empirical works that focus on the acquisition of literacy including cross orthographic research

Psychomotor Symptomatology in Psychiatric Illnesses Manuel Morrens, Sebastian Walther, 2015-12-10 Psychomotor symptoms are those symptoms that are characterized by deficits in the initiation execution and monitoring of movements such as psychomotor slowing catatonia neurological soft signs NSS reduction in motor activity or extrapyramidal symptoms EPS These symptoms have not always received the attention they deserve although they can be observed in a wide range of psychiatric illnesses including mood disorders psychotic disorders anxiety disorders pervasive developmental disorders and personality disorders Nevertheless these symptoms seem to have prognostic value on clinical and functional outcome in several pathologies In the late 19th century the founding fathers of modern psychiatry including Kahlbaum Wernicke Kraepelin and Bleuler had a strong focus on psychomotor abnormalities in their description and definitions of psychiatric illnesses and systematically recognized these as core features of several psychiatric pathologies Nevertheless emphasis on these symptoms has reduced substantially since the emergence of psychopharmacology given the association between antipsychotics or antidepressants and medication induced motor deficits This has resulted in the general idea that most if not all psychomotor deficits were merely side effects of their treatment rather than intrinsic features of the illness Yet the last two decades a renewed interest in these deficits can be observed and has yielded an exponential growth of research into these psychomotor symptoms in several psychiatric illnesses This recent evolution is also reflected in the increased appreciation of these symptoms in the DSM 5 As a result of this increased focus new insights into the clinical and demographical presentation the etiology the course the prognostic value as well as treatment aspects of psychomotor symptomatology in different illnesses has emerged Still many new questions arise from these findings This research topic is comprised of all types of contributions original research reviews and opinion piece with a focus on psychomotor symptomatology in a psychiatric illness especially research focusing on one or more of the following topics the clinical presentation of the psychomotor syndrome the course through the illness the diagnostical specificity of the syndrome the underlying neurobiological or neuropsychological processes new assessment techniques pharmacological or non pharmacological treatment strategies
