And Answers

SHORT ANSWER

1. Lower end of humerus?

ANSWER-The lower end of the humerus refers to the distal part of the upper arm bone, specifically the region where it articulates with the bones of the forearm, the radius, and the ulna. This area of the humerus includes various anatomical structures, such as the capitulum, trochlea, and the condyles.

1. Capitulum: This is a rounded structure on the lateral side of the distal humerus. It forms a joint with the head of the radius bone.
2. Trochlea: The trochlea is located medially on the distal humerus. It is a spool-shaped structure that articulates with the ulna bone, forming the hinge joint of the elbow.
3. Medial and Lateral Condyles: These are bony prominences on the distal end of the humerus. The medial condyle is larger and articulates with the ulna, while the smaller lateral condyle articulates with the radius.

The lower end of the humerus is important for the movements of the elbow joint, allowing flexion and extension, as well as some rotation of the forearm. It is also involved in the stability and function of the wrist and hand due to its connection with the bones of the forearm.

2. Trisomy?

ANSWER-Trisomy is a genetic condition characterized by the presence of an extra copy of a chromosome in the cells of an individual. Normally, humans have 23 pairs of chromosomes, for a total of 46 chromosomes. Trisomy occurs when there is a third copy of one of these chromosomes, resulting in a total of 47 chromosomes instead of 46.
