ENGINE ADAPTOR PLATE, FLYWHEEL AND CLUTCH ASSEMBLY

The adaptor plate is made of steel and is used to connect the engine to the transmission case.

The flywheel sets in every area and connects on the engine through its main pin. It is made of cast iron with a diameter of 100 mm and has a total weight of 10 pounds. The rear face of the flywheel is used as a friction surface which is engaged by the clutch plate. Flywheels that have been burned or ground because their surface should be replaced or machined. Inspect flywheel and ring gear for cracks. To replace ring gear, heat one ring evenly to 200°F and place it in position on the flywheel and allow to cool. Ring gear should be checked for broken or damaged teeth.

The clutch plate bearing should be checked for clearance with main drive shaft, this clearance must not exceed .001 inch. If clearance exceeds this limit remove plate bearing with special puller (Figure 22) and replace new bearing with special tool (Figure 23).

The clutch is a single plate type. It is the same as used on the 40 Ford Tractor.

PISTON, RINGS AND ROD ASSEMBLY

Place one of the aluminum alloy connecting rod ground rings and one of the alloy type with piston pin faces machined by sand screws. Piston pins always be installed so that the double in the crown of the piston is across the front of the engine. Due to the position, the right side of the piston takes the most stress here, thereby distributing the force of the piston evenly uniformly to the connecting rod bearings. When the piston assembly is at room temperature (70°F) the pin should be a tight press fit over the pin face. After the piston assembly reaches operating temperature, the pin will float in the piston pin face.

Two compression and one oil control ring are used to control combustion chamber pressure.

The top compression ring is chamfered and has a tapered face which requires the largest diameter of the ring to be installed toward the bottom of piston.

Second ring compression ring also has a tapered face and must be installed in the same manner as the top compression ring. The oil control ring is of the wedge shaped type and is made of a close ground service alloy.

Connecting rods are special heat-treated alloy steel of the "I" type. The crankshaft with connecting rod bearing eyes is machined by two alloy steel tools. The face is fixed with a splined drive bearing wedge, when replaced, must be ground and lapped to size.
