increasingly dependent on code and code is written to produce space Examples of code space include airport check in areas networked offices and caf s that are transformed into workspaces by laptops and wireless access Kitchin and Dodge argue that software through its ability to do work in the world transduces space Then Kitchin and Dodge develop a set of conceptual tools for identifying and understanding the interrelationship of software space and everyday life and illustrate their arguments with rich empirical material And finally they issue a manifesto calling for critical scholarship into the production and workings of code rather than simply the technologies it enables a new kind of social science focused on explaining the social economic and spatial contours of software
