

GENETIC DIVERSITY

Reading Passage

Genetic diversity refers to the variety of genes within a species or population. It is crucial for the survival and adaptability of species, especially in the face of environmental changes. Genetic diversity can be maintained through mutations, which are random changes in the genetic code, and through genetic recombination during reproduction. These processes generate a wide range of traits within a population.

In nature, natural selection favors traits that increase an organism's survival and reproductive success. For example, finches on the Galapagos Islands have beak sizes that vary depending on the available food sources. During droughts, finches with larger beaks are more likely to crack tough seeds, making them more likely to survive and reproduce. Over generations, the result is a shift in the finch population toward larger beaks.

Another example of genetic adaptation is antibiotic resistance in bacteria. When antibiotics are used to kill bacteria, some bacteria may have mutations that protect them from the medication. These resistant bacteria survive and multiply, passing on their resistance genes to future generations. This process can lead to harmful superbugs that are difficult to eliminate with standard antibiotics, posing a significant challenge to human health.

Genetic diversity also enhances the resilience of ecosystems. In a genetically diverse population, some individuals are more likely to withstand environmental stresses such as disease, climate change, or habitat destruction. This diversity acts as a buffer, allowing species to adapt and survive through changing conditions, ensuring the stability of ecosystems and the services they provide.

True or False Statements

- Mutations are always harmful and never beneficial.
- Natural selection favors traits that increase an organism's chance of survival.
- Finches with larger beaks are better suited for eating seeds with tough, drying husks.
- Antibiotic resistance in bacteria can develop when some bacteria have mutations that protect them from medication.
