

Concepts: Patterns in Triangles

Many more mathematical relationships are produced by the placement of tangents to the circles, and will be discussed during the individual collaborative work on this problem set using geometric construction.

Students are advised that one direction for your work is to draw circles. There are small circles below that form a pattern, and other lines, segments, and circles are drawn around them. However, instead of constructing a pattern, you are asked to construct a circle that is tangent to all three. This is a harder problem to solve, and is the focus of the problem set. You are asked to draw the circles and lines, and to draw the lines that are tangent to all three circles. You are asked to draw the lines that are tangent to all three circles, and to draw the lines that are tangent to all three circles.

1. A circle is drawn that is tangent to all three circles. What is the radius of this circle? What is the area of this circle? What is the perimeter of this circle? What is the circumference of this circle? What is the area of this circle? What is the perimeter of this circle? What is the circumference of this circle?

a. What is the radius of this circle? _____

c. What is the perimeter of this circle? _____
