Formation of tropical storms

(in depth)

1. Rising air draws evaporated water vapour up from the ocean surface which cools and condenses to form towering thunderstorm clouds
2. The condensing releases heat which powers the storm and draws up more water vapour
3. Multiple thunderstorms join to form a giant rotating storm
4. Coriolis forces spin the storm at over 75 mph creating a cast cloud spiral with a central, calm eye of rapidly descending air
5. Prevailing winds drift the storm over the ocean surface gathering strength as it picks up more thermal energy
6. On reaching land the energy supply (evaporated water) is cut off and the storm will weaken

Why do tropical storms move west?

easterly trade winds near equator

The trade winds + Coriolis Effect -> tropical storms move from east to west.
