USED CRAWLER DOZER

The engine compartment should be checked for signs of leaks, both below the engine, and around head gaskets and valve cover gaskets.

Examine the dozer for an excessive number of structural dents, and note any major welds. Both could be signs of abuse or severe-use applications.

Check all hydraulic cylinders for leaks, and note any dents or damaged areas on the rams.

On blades, make sure the unit is solid, without structural damage. Note any wear on the teeth or edges. Make sure there's enough shim left protecting the structure. If blade face appears ripped, it may need to be restored.

Since the undercarriage is such a critical cost component of a dozer, consider paying for a certified inspection.

Check ROPS for dents or welds.

Check roller frame for cracks and welds.

Push beams are subject to a great deal of stress, and should be examined for any structural weaknesses (cracks) or repairs needed. Make sure that any welds are done properly.
