

Family Assessment Using the Calgary Family Assessment Model

The Calgary Family Assessment Model (CFAM) is a guide which helps nurses compile and organize collected data to be used for the assessment of a specific family and assist them to address a certain health problem. The model integrates multidirectional frameworks which comprise of three main categories: structural, functional and developmental. Each of the above categories has been subdivided into smaller classes to determine the strengths and weaknesses of the family and their role in the community at large (Wright, & Leahey, 2015). The assessment results will help the nurse understand the perception and health status of the family, for better intervention and support despite any challenges that the family might be facing. This paper focuses on the utilization of the Calgary Family Assessment Model to assess a family whose one member is suffering from chronic kidney disease stage 5 secondary to diabetes, and offer healthcare support to the family.

The family of choice for this paper is Graham Family. It is a family of five, father 44 years of age, mother 42 years of age with three kids, two girls 15 and 21 years and a boy 18 years old. The main challenging facing this family is the stage 5 chronic kidney disease that the father was diagnosed with 3 years before the interview. The chronic illness developed secondary to diabetes. Stage 5 chronic kidney disease is the end-stage renal disease which means that the kidney can no longer function efficiently. This condition can only be managed through dialysis or a kidney transplant.
