How to Write a Police Report

Four Parts: Following Protocol Describing What Happened Editing Your Report Sample Police Report and Things to Include

If you're a police officer who is deployed to the scene of an incident, writing up a detailed and accurate report is an important part of doing your job correctly. This can also be useful if you are a security guard. Like police officers, security guards may have to write reports on any incident that may have happened during their shift. A good incident report gives a thorough account of what happened. Don't gloss over unsavory information or leave out important facts.

Part 1 of 4: Following Protocol

Get the correct forms from your department. Each police department has a different protocol in place for dealing with an incident and filing a report. You may be responsible for filling out a form issued by your department, or you may be asked to type or write up the report by hand. Don't forget to turn it into the correct department.

- Try to do your write-up using word processing software. It will look neater and you'll be able to use spell check to polish it when you're finished. If you write your report by hand, print clearly instead of using cursive.

    - Start the report as soon as possible. Start by thinking through exactly what happened and jot down some notes as soon as possible after the incident. Write your report the same day as the incident, if you can, because waiting will make it harder to remember details. Try to do your report write-up within the first 24 hours after the incident.[1] [2]
