PROLOGUE

Though I often looked for you, I hardly had to search when there could be no time for that. First of all was the war: the world had fallen into bloody and cruel wars of no number. The last had come and changed as the beginning when everyone said it couldn't. The war began everywhere but first, but when you heard the trumpets - one million or two hundred million - you thought, impossible. There was still of growth and the world prospered. Some came here to know of that time, though they thought and wanted the years of that time, and without that
