

The Application Paper

An Overview of the Application Paper

Your purpose in writing an application paper is to apply established research findings and theories to contemporary problems and issues in psychology. The paper itself may take many forms. For example, it could be an application for a research grant, a proposal for a service learning project, or a recommendation to a client/agency. Regardless of the exact audience and purpose of the specific document, every application paper clearly reviews and describes a body of research or theory, then describes how that previous scholarship informs a specific issue. For example, you may spend time observing a child daycare center in order to observe aspects of child development, then write an essay connecting previous research/theory to your observations.

An application paper can be a first step to a longer research paper because it enables you to think through research and theory as it connects to social phenomenon you would like to better understand.

Audience

Your primary audience includes your professor and classmates—an academic audience with an interest in psychology. Depending on the assignment, additional audiences could include a grant funding agency, a nonprofit organization or other such client, or another person/group interested in your findings.

Your purpose in writing an application paper is to apply established research findings and theories to contemporary problems and issues in psychology.

Variations on the Assignment

Depending on what your class is studying, your professor may ask you to:

- Start with given theory and look for a phenomenon to apply it to.
Example: You might study attribution theory and seek evidence of the theory at work.
- Start with a phenomenon and explain it with theories.
Example: You may be assigned to imagine something like this: "Your college tennis teammates tend to glorify their athletic ability when they dominate a match, but sometimes reference "good or bad luck" as the cause of a game's outcome." This phenomenon may remind you of theories that you can look into further—including attribution theory.
- Start with a particular theory and a specific phenomenon, and ask the student to make a connection between the two.
