

MICROBIOLOGY WITH LAB: A FUNDAMENTAL APPROACH

Task 2: Unknown Lab Manual 1

The goal in this Task 2 lab is to identify an unknown that learners might encounter in the real world using the least number of instruments and tools as possible while still replicating the problem-solving purpose of the lab experience. Learners will be provided with lab evidence and will need to determine the next test steps until a final identification is confirmed. This lab will encourage critical thinking, analysis, reasoning, and decision-making that forges connections among complex systems while solving a problem.

Task Instructions:

Welcome to Unknown 1 Lab! Your goal in this lab is to use various laboratory tests to identify an unknown organism. Before proceeding, double-check that you have selected the correct group based on the first initial of your last/family name.

In a laboratory setting, your time and resources are limited. While the results of several tests are provided in this manual, remember that you will not use every test to make an identification. Instead, use the provided decision tree to choose each next step, narrow down your choices, and identify your unknown organism.

In your lab report, you will only be discussing the Gram stain and two additional tests that you selected based on the decision tree and your results. You will be asked to explain your reasoning for each test that you select. Once you have identified your unknown organism, you will use the results of the Kirby-Bauer diffusion test to select an antibiotic for treatment.

Investigation Tools:

- Refer to Section 4, Lesson 2 to review the information about Gram staining and to reference the decision tree. As a reminder, the decision tree will guide you in making decisions about which tests to explore along the journey to identify your unknown organism.
- Save your lab report as a Word document, titled D311 Task 2 Lab Report Last Name.
- Important Step: In your lab report, indicate which unknown organism number you will identify, or your work will be returned to you without evaluation.
