

When to Exercise

The hour just before the evening meal is a popular time for exercise. The late afternoon workout provides a welcome change of pace at the end of the work day and helps dissolve the day's worries and tensions.

Another popular time to work out is early morning, before the work day begins. Advocates of the early start say it makes them more alert and energetic on the job.

Among the factors you should consider in developing your workout schedule are personal preferences, job and family responsibilities, availability of exercise facilities and weather. It's important to schedule your workouts for a time when there is little chance that you will have to cancel or interrupt them because of other demands on your time.

You should not exercise strenuously during extremely hot, humid weather or within two hours after eating. Heat and/or digestion both make heavy demands on the circulatory system, and a combination with exercise can be an overloading double load.

Measuring Your Heart Rate

When checking heart rate during a workout, take your pulse within five seconds after terminating exercise because it takes 15 seconds to get down once you stop moving. Count pulse for 10 seconds and multiply by six to get the per-minute rate.

Target Heart Rate

Aerobic intensity guidelines for healthy adults are generally set at 60 to 80 percent of heart rate. But, if you're out of shape, remember that moderate to low level and consistent cardiovascular training - well below the standard recommendations set forth - can result in substantial and beneficial effects to your health and can greatly improve cardiovascular endurance.

You can use the following calculation to determine what percentage of your heart rate you are working at:

$$\% \text{ heart rate} = (220 - \text{age}) \times \%$$

Using the calculation, a 70% heart rate for a 40 year old would be  $(220 - 40) \times 70\%$  or 126. Thus, the individual would need to reach 126 beats per minute to equal a 70% heart rate.

The above recommendations are guidelines. People with any medical limitations should discuss this formula with their physician.

Clothing

All exercise clothing should be loose fitting to permit freedom of movement, and should make the wearer feel comfortable and self-assured.

Never wear cottonized or plastic clothing garments like the car starts with the dissipation of perspiration and can cause body temperature to rise to dangerous levels.

Wear comfortable, supported athletic shoes with non-slip soles, both at running or aerobic, shoes.

Tips to Keep You Going

1. Adopt a specific plan and write it down.
2. Keep setting realistic goals as you go along, and reward yourself if them often.
3. Keep a log to record your progress and make sure to keep it up-to-date. See charts in the booklet.
4. Include weight and/or percent body fat measures in your log. Extra pounds can really weigh back.
5. Enter the equipment and company of your family and friends.
6. Update where on your business.
7. Avoid excuses by pacing yourself and including a warm-up and cool-down period as part of every workout.
8. Reward yourself periodically for a job well done!
