Monarch Butterflies: Incredible Migration

Monarch butterflies are famous for their long-distance migration. Each year, billions of monarchs travel from the northeastern United States and southern Canada to central Mexico. This journey is one of the most remarkable in the animal kingdom.

The monarchs begin their migration in late August or early September. They fly south, following a path that is passed down from generation to generation. The butterflies are able to find their way through a variety of weather conditions, including storms and strong winds.

During their migration, monarchs feed on milkweed plants. These plants contain a toxic substance that the butterflies store in their bodies. This makes them unpalatable to predators. The monarchs also use their bright orange and black wings to warn other animals that they are poisonous.

After several weeks of flight, the monarchs reach their winter home in central Mexico. They cluster together in large numbers to survive the cold winter months. In the spring, they return to their birthplace and lay their eggs on milkweed plants.

The monarch butterfly's migration is a true wonder of nature. It is a testament to the incredible abilities of these small creatures.
