

Of course, simply stating the topic of a paragraph isn't enough; you need to support your main point with evidence to prove that your idea is clear. It's worth considering that EVIDENCE might include research, facts, research quotations or citations from authorities, anecdotes, personal anecdotes, observations, and examples. In the paragraph below, linguist Dennis Baron uses quotations and examples to make his point that "very" is a singular possessive ("Everyone forgets that possessively" rather than "his or her" or merely "her") has been in use for a long time.

Faced with the onslaught of coined possessives in the 1880s, English did begin to seem less and less objectionable, and more observers recognized the odd but much-maligned singular they as the people's choice. For example, a writer in 1884 recommended they as an inclusive pronoun to be used with either gendered them and he. According to another writer, C. K. Middle, there was no need for invented pronouns because they has been singular "for ages" in the writing of standard authors like Dickens. Middle criticized experts who withheld their approval "for grammarians and dictionary makers are very conservative and often positively stupid" for rejecting a term "so typical to the genius of our language that hardly one in a hundred has noticed it as an innovation."

—Dennis Baron, What's That Pronoun? Beyond He and She

The topic sentence begins the paragraph, and then information from two different sources—a paraphrase of one writer's solution and a quote from another—provides support for the conclusion made in the topic sentence.

Paragraph Length and Number

The simplest answer to the questions "How long should my paragraphs be?" and "How many paragraphs should my essays contain?" is this: "As long as you need" and "as many as you need." In other words, the length and number of paragraphs in a text depend on your content, on what you need to say. Generally, your paragraphs should signal that groups of sentences are related in meaning and should help readers make those connections. For those reasons, too many brief paragraphs may make a text feel too short because each sentence stands alone, unconnected to the rest of the paragraph, while long paragraphs in an essay of a single, very long reading sentence may leave readers to try to group related ideas together themselves. In other words, the number of paragraphs and the number of sentences in each paragraph depend on the message you're trying to convey—but there's a range of arbitrary numbers. Here are some reasons to begin a paragraph:

- to introduce a new subject or idea
- to emphasize an idea
- to give readers a needed pause
- to signal a new speaker when writing dialogue

Transitions

Transitions help readers move from thought to thought—from sentence to sentence, paragraph to paragraph. You're likely to use a number of transitions as you draft, and EDITING, you should make a point of checking transitions. Here are some common ones:

| Open and often | Change in direction or expectations | Comparisons     |
|----------------|-------------------------------------|-----------------|
| although       | although                            | also            |
| as a result    | but                                 | in the same way |
| because        | even though                         | like            |
| consequently   | however                             | likewise        |
| and            | in contrast                         | similarly       |
| or             | instead                             |                 |
| for            | nevertheless                        | Examples        |
| nevertheless   | nonetheless                         | for example     |
| for            | on the contrary                     | for instance    |
|                | on the one hand                     | instead         |
|                | on the other hand                   | in fact         |
| and            |                                     | such as         |
| yet            |                                     |                 |
