

Environmental Chemistry

The study of the chemical and physical processes that occur in the environment, and the impact of human activities on these processes. It is a multidisciplinary field that draws on chemistry, physics, biology, and geology. Environmental chemists study the fate and transport of pollutants in the atmosphere, water, and soil, and the effects of these pollutants on living organisms and the environment. They also study the natural cycles of elements and compounds in the environment, and the role of these cycles in the Earth's climate system.
