Lemon as BATTERY

OBJECTIVE: To construct a simple battery using lemons and metal strips.

AIM: To demonstrate the conversion of chemical energy into electrical energy.

THEORY: A lemon battery is a simple electrochemical cell. It consists of two different metals (zinc and copper) inserted into a lemon. The lemon juice acts as an electrolyte, allowing the flow of electrons from the zinc electrode to the copper electrode.

PROCEDURE:

1. Wash the lemon thoroughly and cut it in half.
2. Insert a zinc strip (galvanized nail) into one half of the lemon.
3. Insert a copper strip (copper wire) into the other half of the lemon.
4. Connect the zinc strip of one lemon to the copper strip of another lemon.
5. Repeat the process for several lemons.

RESULT: The lemon battery produces a small amount of electrical energy, which can be used to power a small LED bulb or a digital multimeter.

QUESTION:

1. What is the purpose of the lemon battery?

2. How does the lemon battery work?

3. What are the components of the lemon battery?

4. How can we increase the voltage of the lemon battery?

5. What are the applications of the lemon battery?

ANSWER:

1. The purpose of the lemon battery is to demonstrate the conversion of chemical energy into electrical energy.

2. The lemon battery works by using the lemon juice as an electrolyte to allow the flow of electrons from the zinc electrode to the copper electrode.

3. The components of the lemon battery are a zinc strip (galvanized nail), a copper strip (copper wire), and a lemon.

4. We can increase the voltage of the lemon battery by connecting multiple lemons in series.

5. The applications of the lemon battery are to power small electronic devices like an LED bulb or a digital multimeter.

CONCLUSION: The lemon battery is a simple and effective way to demonstrate the conversion of chemical energy into electrical energy. It is a great educational tool for students to learn about electrochemistry.
