

EEOC Statements on Pre-Employment Inquiries

“Although Title VII does not make pre-employment inquiries concerning race, color, religion or national origin per se violations of the law, the Commission’s responsibility to equal employment opportunity compels it to regard such inquiries with extreme disfavor.”

“ ... in the investigation of charges alleging the commission of unlawful employment practices, the Commission will pay particular attention to the use by the party against whom charges have been made of pre-employment inquiries concerning race, religion, color, or national origin, or other inquiries which tend directly or indirectly to disclose such information. The fact that such questions are asked may, unless otherwise explained, constitute evidence of discrimination, and will weigh significantly in the Commission’s decision as to whether or not Title VII has been violated”
