

Hurricane Katrina

Q: Explain the natural processes which caused this hurricane and Describe its impact on the people

On Monday 29th of August 2005 hurricane Katrina struck the Gulf of Mexico and caused a catastrophe. The area that was most affected was New Orleans as it was in its worst ever stage over there (155mph+). It was one of the worst ever hurricanes that hit the USA since the one in 1900 Galveston on September the 8th.

Hurricane Katrina started off as any other hurricane at the beginning, they get the warm moist air from the ocean which then releases a huge amounts of energy. This was known as just a tropical storm for now, it then span anti-clockwise which makes the storm, they move west they get more power from the winds which makes the storm 27 degrees Celsius or higher. They lose strength over land because the energy supply of water is cut off and the real action starts to take place. After it hit it didn't come back for 4 days, which was predicted, so in the time the people in New Orleans had to evacuate and people in the ninth ward boarded up houses. When it hit it went in to a category one hurricane reaching speeds up to 75-95mph, then it went in to a category 3 hurricane, 96-110mph, which caused a storm surge in the ocean reaching heights from 14-17 ft. high in the industrial canals.

Before the hurricane itself hit people either evacuated to a different state or took cover in the Louisiana super dome where only 14,000+ people went where it can fit 70,500. This was because the supply of food and water. It was a place where the poorest people will take coverage but still they wouldn't go in, only the riches people in the state left due to the fact they had their own transportation but the poor people didn't.

The state of emergency means when there is national danger and the government suspend rules in order to get in control. FEMA, federal emergency management agency, played a huge roll in this problem as they supplied the troops, water and food but they only sent in 100 troops, a single tanked truck. They were asked to rescue people but the local sheriffs had to do it and they denied the delivery of more water supply. Another thing responsible for make the state in a miserable position is that the levees, a water foodbank, which can stop floods and a hurricane under category 3 was broken due to problem in the system.

Hurricane Katrina caused a damage worth $81 billion dollars in Louisiana and New Orleans which sunk in the water by 80% and may increase in Mississippi by $150 billion dollars. 800,00 of home units were destroyed, 1,833 people were killed and 400,00- 1 million people were made homeless due to the aftermath of hurricane Katrina. Katrina also caused damage to the coastal areas of the state as a lot of erosion took place which made sea creatures homeless and a number of sea turtle eggs were kill due the flooding which made New Orleans the most polluted place in the state.

Since Hurricane Katrina many things have changed in the cities that were affected. Many homes were destroyed and now the communities are working to rebuild their once beautiful cities. Some people just decided to move to other states, but others know that they must restore what was destroyed. Help is coming from all over the United States. Many people have gone down to New Orleans to volunteer (1). Others have started charity events that help fund the reconstruction of the city (1). There are still chances to help out the people by donating to any charity that aids Hurricane Katrina victims(1).
