Culture War and Ethical Theory Richard F. Von Dohlen,1997 This book introduces major philosophical theories and issues in the context of the contemporary debate about the so called culture wars in American society It is designed to make these theories come alive as they are related to these vital contemporary concerns and to provide a framework within which to assess the ongoing debate about the future direction of Western culture As a book in ethical theory it is designed to provide the framework for clear and comprehensive thinking about our cultural development Classical ethical positions like cultural relativism emotivism egoism hedonism utilitarianism and theorists like Kant are introduced and assessed The contemporary theorists John Rawls and Alasdair MacIntyre are given extensive treatment and made accessible to the introductory student in philosophy Culture War and Ethical Theory exhibits a non ptolemical tone as it relates these theories for heuristic purposes to the contrasting perspective of fundamentalism and secular humanism These two viewpoints are treated fairly without pretense of thorough exposition They were chosen because they set the contemporary debate in stark relief Thus they assist the reader in understanding the relationship of philosophical reflection to commonly held perspectives
