

THE CIRCULATORY SYSTEM

Most of the cells in the human body are not in direct contact with the external environment. The circulatory system acts as a transport service for these cells. Two fluids move through the circulatory system: blood and lymph.

THE HEART

The blood, heart, and blood vessels form the cardiovascular system. The lymph, lymph nodes, and lymph vessels form the lymphatic system. The cardiovascular system and lymphatic system collectively make up the circulatory system. The circulatory system transports nutrients, hormones, and gases; gets rid of wastes; and helps maintain a constant body temperature.

The central organ of the cardiovascular system is the heart, the muscular organ that pumps blood through a network of blood vessels. The heart beats more than 2.5 billion times in an average life span. Yet this organ is slightly larger than a fist. The heart lies within the thoracic (chest) cavity, behind the sternum (breastbone) and between the two lungs. A tough, saclike membrane called the pericardium surrounds the heart and secretes a fluid that reduces friction as the heart beats.

Notice in Figure 46-1 that a septum (wall) vertically divides the heart into two sides. The right side pumps blood to the lungs, and the left side pumps blood to the other parts of the body. Each side of the heart is divided into an upper and lower chamber. Each upper chamber is called an atrium, and each lower chamber is called a ventricle.

The septum prevents mixing of blood from the two sides of the heart, and the valves ensure that blood flows in only one direction.

OBJECTIVES

- Describe the structure and function of the human heart.
- Trace the flow of blood through the heart and body.
- Distinguish between arteries, veins, and capillaries in terms of their structure and function.
- Distinguish between pulmonary circulation and systemic circulation.
- Summarize the functions of the lymphatic system.
