

How to Start your Philosophy Paper

Outline/Essay Guide

- Introduction with a Thesis Statement (3-4 sentences usually for a paper this short)
- Your introduction should be clever and eye-catching (no "Since the dawn of time..." or "Webster's Dictionary defines X as...")
- Thesis Statement: A thesis statement is one sentence that expresses the main idea of an essay, asserts your position.
- Your outline needs to have a 1-2 sentence summary of your introduction and thesis statement. You will flesh out the intro in your paper.
- In philosophy, it can take the form of something like this: I will argue that X is the case for a, b, and c reasons, or "In his ethics, Epicurus cannot account for the way that we should treat our friends. True friends do not treat their friends well just because doing so helps them to get pleasure for themselves." (Tim O'Keefe and Anne Farrell)

Body of the Outline/Paper:

- Examines the points you told your reader you were going to make in the thesis statement. This section is about 2/3 of your outline and then your essay (and 75% of this section will be explaining to the reader the ideas from the philosophers and not use the pronoun "I")
- Philosopher X argues...An outline should have a 1-2 sentence summary of EACH of the reasons
