Morton, L. (1957). The decision to use the atomic bomb. Foreign Affairs, 35(2), 334-353. Retrieved from <http://ezproxy.snhu.edu/login?url=http://www.jstor.org/stable/20031230>

The article was published in 1957, twelve years after the United States of America dropped the world's first deployed atomic bomb on the Japanese city of Hiroshima. Pilot accounts and other experts involved first-hand in the Manhattan project are asked. Also, Harry Truman's interview is available. 1957, the Cold War between the USA and the USSR was on. The author expressed that it was highly unlikely that atomic bombs would be used after the effects of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Morton's thesis is that Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombings had changed war forever ushering in a new version of modern war. Cold-war concerns influence the author's search for the inside story. According to Morton (1957), there was a need for the USA to retaliate for the Japanese attack of the United States fleet at Pearl Harbor. However, the author critiques whether the use of atomic bombs on civilians was the most humanitarian solution.

Walker, J. S. (2005). Recent literature on Truman's atomic bomb decision: A search for middle ground. Diplomatic History, 29(2), 311-334.

The article was published initially in August 2005, 60 years after the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The NSA had released previously classified documents. The long-term effects of the bombing such as radiation poisoning on the populace and secret notes on the Manhattan Project are highlighted and described though not in great detail. The documents are declassified, which lets the public to know some of the pertinent questions. However, there is still controversy on various grounds. The article is not helpful for objective answers.

Walker is the author of the article. It describes several documents which were classified before including President Truman's diary. The documents are told from an American perspective, and that is to be expected to see that Walker is American. The author questions the President's Truman's decision and what made him decide on the bombings. His thesis is that public pressure on Pearl Harbor made the Truman administration go on a revenge mission on Japan. Walker argues that the president had no choice, he had to do something as the Commander-in-Chief.
