

Seed Dissection

Overview: Corn kernels, or seeds, have 4 main components. They are the pericarp, endosperm, embryo and tip cap. The pericarp is the covering that protects the inside of the kernel. The endosperm is the energy source for the seedling, and the embryo contains the future seedling. The tip cap is where the kernel attaches to the cob.

Directions: Select one of the germinated corn kernels. Using a scalpel, slice the kernel length wise in half to expose the internal components.

Sketch & Label your seed

Conclusion Questions:

1. How do the textures of the different components differ?
2. Where is the energy of the corn kernel contained?
3. Why is corn difficult for animals to digest?
