TOP 10 APPLICATION TIPS

1. Make contacts.
Get to know the teachers at the universities you're applying to before you submit your application. Find out who the course leaders and academic staff are. Look them up and connect via email or follow them on social media.

2. Grab their interest from the beginning.
When it comes to actually writing your personal statement, be sure to make the first paragraph interesting. Like a news report, the first few words should grab their attention and draw them in.

3. Give lots of examples.
Don't just name the areas that you're interested in, such as: "I find history fascinating" and leave it at that. Show them. Show them how much you love the subject.

4. Make it personal.
Don't try and use lots of big academic words to try and make yourself sound clever. Keep it simple. And explain exactly why the course you've chosen appeals to you.

5. Choose referees carefully.
Your application will also come with letters of recommendation. Your referees should be able to vouch for your academic ability. Ideally they should be able to give lots of examples of where you've excelled.

6. Practise and proofread.
Do a few drafts of your application. Before submitting it, run it past a friend or family member. Ask your advisor or teacher for feedback. Proofread it as many times as you can before submitting. An error-ridden application will not impress.

7. Include relevant extra-curriculars.
When including your hobbies or extra-curricular activities make sure they're relevant. Show how they've developed even more useful employment skills in your field of study.

8. Sell yourself.
Tell the reader why you would make a good addition to the university. Don't be too egotistical or however, and try and stay humble.

9. Think about structure.
Plan your application in advance to ensure a good structure. Make sure the piece flows and is clear and concise.

10. Don't miss deadlines.
Make a note of all deadlines in your diary, so that you don't miss one. If your application is too late it will be discarded, however interested you may be.
