Followed by chemical digestion facilitated by enzymes, these enzymes utilize the hydrolysis of complex macromolecules into smaller molecules, and finally the water-soluble units that enter the bloodstream. Amino acids and glucose are absorbed in the small intestine. The large intestine of the small intestine is a long, thin tube with many folds, which increases its surface area and enables for absorption. The intestinal permeability allows for efficient transfer of nutrients across the intestinal epithelium that has a high surface area. The intestinal epithelium is composed of simple cuboidal cells, which are arranged in a single layer. The cells are connected to each other by tight junctions, which prevent the leakage of water and electrolytes into the intestinal lumen. Mostly produced by the liver and stored in the gallbladder, bile is the formation of emulsions, converting large, fatty droplets into smaller droplets for absorption. For smaller droplets, the surface area is increased along with bile. These droplets are then absorbed into the bloodstream. The bile is then reabsorbed in the large intestine and excreted. The absorption of bile is dependent on the presence of bile salts, which are reabsorbed in the large intestine and excreted in the feces.  Circle the best answer for each question. 1. What is the main function of the gallbladder? a. To produce bile b. To store bile c. To transport bile d. To absorb bile 2.
