

Conclusions

It is here that the research can both summarise his or her findings and suggest applications of those findings. Again, such applications should be realistic and no attempt should be made to extrapolate beyond the data. Arguably, it is impossible to generalise from qualitative data (because of the sampling methods, the ways of collecting data and the methods of analysis) – and most would say that it is not the point of doing qualitative research to generalise in this way. However, it is sometimes a temptation for the research to project his or her chance to reflect on his or her own practice and, as appropriate, be critical of the approach adopted here. While there can never be a standardised template for writing research reports, certain features always occur in any account.

From Research to Manuscript Michael Jay Katz, 2009-01-21 Observations Plus Recipes It has been said that science is the orderly collection of facts about the natural world Scientists however are wary of using the word fact Fact has the feeling of absoluteness and universality whereas scientific observations are neither absolute nor universal For example children have 20 deciduous baby teeth is an observation about the real world but scientists would not call it a fact Some children have fewer deciduous teeth and some have more Even those children who have exactly 20 deciduous teeth use the full set during only a part of their childhood When they are babies and toddlers children have less than 20 visible teeth and as they grow older children begin to lose their deciduous teeth which are then replaced by permanent teeth Children have 20 deciduous baby teeth is not even a complete scientific statement For one thing the statement children have 20 deciduous teeth does not tell us what we mean by teeth When we say teeth do we mean only those that can be seen with the unaided eye or do we also include the hidden unerupted teeth An observation such as children have 20 deciduous teeth is not a fact and by itself it is not acceptable as a scientific statement until its terms are explained scientifically children have 20 deciduous teeth must be accompanied by definitions and qualifiers
