

CHAPTER III (Curriculum Design)

Objectives: By the end of this chapter, you must be able to:

1. define curriculum design;
2. identify different examples of curriculum designs;
3. discuss the things to consider in designing a curriculum; and
4. identify the features of a good curriculum design.

Definition of Curriculum Design

Curriculum design refers to the arrangement of the elements of a curriculum. These four elements are intent (aims, goals, and objectives); subject matter or content; learning experiences; and evaluation.

- used interchangeably with curriculum organization.

Two Ways of Organizing Curriculum Contents (Posner (1997))

- Macro Level deals with arranging or organizing the total curriculum from the philosophy down to the contents of different subjects.
- Micro level deals with organizing the content of a specific subject or discipline.

The macro level of arranging the elements and contents of the curriculum can be referred to as a function of curriculum design while the micro level is a function of curriculum organization. However, it is important to note that curriculum organization is based on the curriculum design curriculum design provides a philosophical way of organizing the contents and elements for the curriculum.

Different Curriculum Designs

Print 1988 classified the different curriculum designs in four groups according to him all curriculum designs can be classified as subject centered learner centered problem centered or core learning design

1. Subject centered designs. Majority of the curriculum used in schools are arranged or organized in terms of subjects. Thus, the subject centered design is the most popular among the four types of curriculum designs the subject centered design is classified into three specific designs:
 - a. Subject design. The curriculum is organized in terms of subjects like Mathematics, Science, Filipino, English, and other subjects. Most of these subjects are offered in the elementary level. The subjects are organized in a fragmented manner. Connections between and among these subjects are not emphasized in the subject design. Instead the nature of the subject is
