

Initial Thoughts

1. What should teachers know about accommodations for students with disabilities?
 - a. Teachers should know that students who receive accommodations through an IEP or other documented form must follow those accommodations. Those accommodations are put into place to give the student a level playing field with their peers.
2. What types of accommodations are commonly used for students with disabilities?
 - a. Extended test time
 - b. Dictated tests
 - c. Use of special devices
3. What are the teacher's responsibilities for students with disabilities who use accommodations?
 - a. It is the teacher's responsibility to fully ensure that students with disabilities are given their accommodations.
4. What are accommodations?
 - a. Accommodations do not change the expectation of learning or reduce the requirements of the task.
5. How do they differ from modifications?
 - a. Do change the expectations for learning
Do reduce the requirements of the task (e.g., reduce number of items, alternate assignments, lower-level reading assignments)
6. A student's accommodations might differ from one setting to another. Explain why this might be the case and offer an example.
 - a. An accommodation might be allowed for a classroom assessment but not for a standardized test. If a test is specifically assessing a certain aspect of learning, the accommodation will interfere with the validity of the results.
7. Name at least three accommodations categories. For each, give an example of an accommodation and describe how it could support a student with a disability.
 - a. Presentation-books and materials with large print allow a student with a visual disability see the words.
 - b. Timing and scheduling: breaking large tasks into smaller ones allows students with comprehension difficulties to focus on a single section instead of a whole.
 - c. Setting: allow students to test in a separate room allows students who become easily distracted to focus on the task.
8. Mrs. Watkins, a sixth-grade science teacher, typically lectures using PowerPoint while students take notes. She assigns her students to read and answer questions from the textbook, and requires them to conduct lab experiments by following written procedures. She assesses her students using written tests. A student in her classroom has a learning disability and reads at a third-grade level. Based on what you know about Mrs. Watkins class:
