

Introduction

Jane Austen has sometimes been called an 'indoor writer', confining her novels to the drawing rooms of upper-middle class women, their friends, families and prospective husbands, but in Emma, the outdoors is used in a variety of ways. Emma's relationship with, and attitude towards, the outdoors seems to be linked to her fluctuating level of self awareness, and contrasted with Mr Knightley's attitude towards the same. She has, for nearly all her life, been confined to Hartfield and its grounds, and is snobbish and disdainful towards those in closer contact with nature – Mr Martin, a farmer and Harriet's suitor, and the gypsies who harass Harriet when she takes a country path. Mr Knightley on the other hand, is to a certain extent the book's voice of reason, and has a less fanciful and more practical attitude towards nature, with tasteful grounds and farmland. Outdoor settings are also used to characterise romantic relationships in Emma.

The introduction should include key elements like - presenting the research question, your rationale, thesis statement, contextual background and your research aims..
