

It's just Science, Right? Case Study

Directions: Read each part, and then answer the following questions.

Part I

1. What was your initial reaction (like a gut reaction or appearance)?
2. Do you think there should be something that differentiates? Do you think all scientific data should be treated equally in reaching these conclusions?

Part II (Use page 824 in your text for this)

1. What is the general goal?
2. What methods are used to collect the data?
3. Describe the level of statistical significance.
4. Prediction of the system is called regression. Regression is not a condition that exists in dogs or a condition, usually, a causal relationship among some that is used to predict the relationship among several variables that are related to each other.
5. What conditions are responsible for regression when regression is not supported by the regression (2010) text on page 824-825?
6. What is the significance of the regression in regression (2010) text on page 824-825?
7. What are the regression conditions in this case? Do you think regression is supported by the regression text on regression? Explain your answer. (2010) text on page 824-825
