Passive Structures in Singapore English Dominik Lorenz, 2007-05-02 Seminar paper from the year 2006 in the subject American Studies Linguistics grade 2 University of Freiburg course Proseminar I language English abstract Ho and Platt 1993 1 argue that Singaporean English is a particularly interesting indigenized or nativized speech variety because it is so widely used and fills so many functions I can confirm Ho and Platt's statement since I was in Singapore in 2004 It was not difficult to notice Singapore English as a speech variety This sparked my interest in participating in the proseminar English in Singapore and consequently in researching into a certain grammatical phenomenon in Singapore English namely the passive voice In this term paper a short analysis of the two passive structures specific to Colloquial Singapore English the so called kena passive and the give passive will be presented Further on we the get passive will be examined We will show that give and kena constructions are derived from the languages of Chinese and Malay respectively The bigger part of this paper will be to examine the overall frequencies thereof Which of the two passive constructions will be closer in structure to the standard form A personal analysis will help us to answer this question always with the hidden desire to finally come up with a reasonable conclusion towards the end of the paper We will probably have a winner of the competing substrate form and we will hopefully find out which passive construction is the most productive one in Singapore English Moreover we want to compare the frequency of the kena passive with the getpassive's frequency in a corpus based analysis Admittedly the corpus based study will be relatively restrictive and not quite large in size In addition the give passive will be ignored due to its rarity Further on we want to compare passive voice in Singapore with the passive in Standard English To manage this after having presented the development of Singapore its multilingualism and English as its most common language we will define some basic terms which will be used in this term paper After that we will explain the corpus and the methodology used In the end we will sum up the findings and we will discuss my own study Perhaps there are possibilities how to do it better next time or there are other things that could be done
