

Macromolecules

Abstract:

There are four broad classes of macromolecules that can be found in living systems. Each type of macromolecule has a characteristic structure and function in living organisms. You can use your knowledge of the basic structure of each macromolecule to perform tests in the lab that detect the presence or absence of key functional groups or overall characteristics in various substances. In this lab, you will utilize the following procedures to detect three of these macromolecules in everyday household items - note what each procedure will detect in which macromolecules.

Test (procedure)	Structure/ Molecule Detected:	Structure/Molecule Found in:
Benedict's	Reducing sugars (sugars with a free aldehyde or ketone group; typically mono or disaccharides)	Carbohydrates
Iodine	Starch	Carbohydrates
Sudan IV	Water insoluble substances	Lipids
Biuret's	Peptide Bonds	Protein

Table 1. A list of the detection reagents used to reveal the presence of specific macromolecules.

Use the internet or library as a source and list three examples of reducing sugars:

- Reducing Sugar: _____ Found in: _____
- Reducing Sugar: _____ Found in: _____
- Reducing Sugar: _____ Found in: _____

Detection Reagent	Explanation of Detection
Benedict's	Contains Copper Sulfate. Copper binds to oxygen in the free aldehyde or ketone group and the Copper Oxide that is formed transmits a brown color.
Iodine	Iodine interacts with and binds to a structure in the starch molecule, the new structure transmits a dark bluish black color
Sudan IV	Water insoluble substances interact with other water insoluble substances
Biuret's	Contains Copper Sulfate and Sodium Hydroxide. Copper Sulfate actively binds to the peptide bonds found in proteins, and the structure formed transmits a violet color in an alkaline (basic) environment, which is provided by the presence of the NaOH.

Table 2. Chemical explanations for the colorimetric changes observed in macromolecule detection tests.
