Abstract. With the sweeping of the new curriculum reform, new changes and requirements in English teaching stress the development of students' key competencies and require teachers to carry out teaching activities based on key competencies. As an important part of teaching, however, the evaluation in traditional English classes in senior high school lacks diversity and innovation and ignores the main role of students. Many explorations on classroom teaching evaluation have been conducted, but most of them are theoretical research, focusing on the compulsory education stage. This paper studies the evaluation of high school English classroom teaching combined with key competencies and explores the impact of the evaluation on English teaching and learning. The author selected two classes in a senior high school as the experimental class and the control class to conduct a two-month comparative experiment using classroom observation, testing and other experimental tools. It is found that the English classroom evaluation based on the key competencies can promote teaching effect as well as learning effect. Therefore, in the classroom evaluation, it is important for teachers to implement key competencies in the classroom teaching evaluation, use diversified teaching evaluation to arouse students' enthusiasm for learning, and improve students' comprehensive English learning ability.

Keywords: English key competencies; classroom teaching evaluation; English in senior high school.

1. Introduction

Along with the rapid development of the social economy, society's demand for talents has shown a diversified trend. The cultivation of talents in various countries is no longer limited to the outstanding knowledge level but focuses more on the key competencies required by society [1]. Therefore, learning is not only the acquisition of knowledge and the reproduction of memory but also active thinking and learning [2]. This requires that school education should also keep pace with the times, and the curriculum should be in line with social needs to serve the cultivation of innovative talents with key competencies. On March 30, 2014, the "Opinions on Comprehensively Deepening Curriculum Reform and Implementing the Fundamental Tasks of Moral Education" issued by the Ministry of Education first proposed to take key competency as the main area of curriculum reform, and emphasized the importance of high-level cognitive ability in school education [3]. The "Classroom Teaching Evaluation Standards" under the new curriculum reform clearly define the aim of the classroom evaluation reform as evaluation is not to overemphasize the function of screening and selection, but to optimize the function of evaluation to contribute to the development of students as well as to improve teachers' teaching practice [4].

As an important part of English courses, the importance of teaching evaluation is self-evident. On the one hand, classroom teaching evaluation is conducive to enhancing students' confidence in English learning and helping students to adjust their learning strategies in the learning process [5]. On the other hand, classroom teaching evaluation also has a promoting effect on classroom teaching, which can help teachers consciously control teaching behaviors to improve teaching levels. Therefore, the cultivation of key competencies is inseparable from a scientific teaching evaluation system. But at present, in most authentic English classrooms in senior high schools in China, classroom teaching evaluation has the following problems: First, the teaching evaluation is too quantitative. At present, the evaluation of English teaching in senior high schools in China is still mainly based on test scores, and it puts great store by the results and ignores the learning process. Second, the evaluation content
