Collaborate with others to support and enhance client services.

We often work with others to ensure the best outcomes for our clients. Collaboration is necessary for creating effective interventions. When we think of collaboration, we often think of interdisciplinary collaboration (e.g. with Speech-Language Pathologists and Occupational Therapists) but we also collaborate with clients, stakeholders, and family members as well as with other professionals like doctors, psychologists, teachers, and anyone else on our clients' support team. Remember that we are all on the same side - the clients!

Barriers to Effective Collaboration - Henderson et al (2020) identified the following barriers to effective interdisciplinary collaboration:

- 1. Structural barriers include time constraints due to busy schedules, organizational constraints (due to organizations not prioritizing or supporting collaboration), geographic distance (working in different locations, making regular communication and collaboration challenging).
- 2. Interdisciplinary differences - Professionals may not fully understand each other's roles, terminology, or methodologies. There may also be differences in approach to treatment. Professionals may avoid collaboration due to fear of being judged about their methods, may be reluctant to seek or accept input from other disciplines, and generally lack trust and respect for other professionals. For example, a doctor might not value the input of a physical therapist.
- 3. Ethical differences - Different professions have different ethical standards and may disagree on what is appropriate. We may reject interventions that are too complicated or time-consuming for our clients or other professionals. For example, a behavior analyst might find it harder to work with a teacher who is not trained in intervention.
- 4. Measurement differences - Professionals may use different measurement systems, shared systems, or different methods to measure effectiveness. For example, a behavior analyst might use a different measurement system than a teacher.
